

Yamaha Acquires Revolabs

Written by Marco Attard
21 March 2014

Yamaha bolsters its enterprise audio equipment portfolio with wireless microphone systems and conference phones as it acquires Revolabs for an undisclosed sum.

"Revolabs' ethos of creating products that provide value for customers with strong technical capabilities as a base meshes well with the Yamaha Group's corporate philosophy," Yamaha president Takuya Nakata says. "By combining Revolabs' wireless microphone systems and wireless conference phones with Yamaha's voice communication devices and professional audio equipment, we expect to be able to create even more appealing solutions for our customers."

Nakata adds the acquisition will help increase Yamaha electronic business unit sales, one of the primary goals in the recently announced Yamaha Management Plan 2016.

Revolabs will operate as a wholly-owned subsidiary working on own market goals with the current management team following completion of the acquisition.

Go Revolabs Announces Acquisition by Yamaha